Notes for John DAINTY:

The Ancient History of the Distinguished Surname Dainty:

The most ancient surname of Dainty makes an impressive claim in being one of the oldest Anglo/Saxon surnames on record. The history of the name is closely woven into the intricate tapestry of the ancient chronicles of England.

Professional researchers have carefully criticized such ancient manuscripts as the Domesday Book (1086), The Ragman Rolls (1291-1296), the Cruia Regis Rolls, The Pipe Rolls, the Hearth Rolls, parish registers, baptismal, tax records and other ancient documents and found the first record of the name Dainty in Northampton where they were seated from very ancient times, some say well before the Norman Conquest and the arrival of Duke William at Hastings in 1066 a.d.

Many different spellings were encountered in the research of your surname. Although your name, Dainty, occurred in many manuscripts and documents, from time to time the surname was also officially spelled Daventry, Daintry, Dainty, Dantry, Dantye and these variations in spelling frequently occurred even between father and son. Scribes and church officials, often travelling great distances, even from other countries, frequently spell the names they were recording as they heard it. As a result the same person could find different spellings of the name recorded on birth, baptismal, marriage and death certificates as well as the other numerous records such as tax and census records.

The Saxon race gave birth to many English surnames not the least of which was the surname Dainty. The Saxons were invited into England by the ancient Britons in the 5th century. They were a race of fair skinned people living along the Rhine valley as far north east as Denmark. They were led by General/Commander: Hengist and Horse. The Saxons settled in the county of Kent, on the South east coast of England. Gradually, they probed north and westward, and during the next four hundred years forced the Ancient Britons back into Wales and Cornwall in the west. Cumberland to the North. The Anglos, on the other hand, occupied the eastern coast, the south folk in Suffolk, north folk in Norfolk, Under Saxon rule England prospered under a series of High Kings, the last of which was Harold. In the Norman invasion from France occurred and their victory at the Battle of Hastings. Subsequently, many of the vanquished Saxon land owners forfeited their land to Duke William and his invading Norman nobles. Generally, the Saxons who remained in the south were not treated well under Norman rule, and many moved northward to the midlands, Lancaster and Yorkshire away from the Norman oppression.

This notable English family name, Dainty, emerged as an influential name in the county of Northampton where they were recorded as a family of great antiquity seated at Daventry with large manors and estates in the shire. This is one of the families in which the senior branch accompanied Earl David of Huntingdon north to Scotland and were granted lands by King David in the county of Edinburgh about 1140. Later John Daventre rendered homage to King Edward I of England on his brief conquest of Scotland in 1296. They flourished in south eastern Scotland and by 1400 had moved north acquiring estates in Aberdeen. In general the pronunciation and spelling Daintry was more prevalent in Scotland. Meanwhile the southern branch in England acquired Rhode Hall in the county of Cheshire. Notable amongst the family at this time was John Daventre.

During the middle ages the surname Dainty flourished and played an important role in local affairs and in the political development of England. During the 15th, 16th, 17th and 18th centuries England was ravaged by plagues and religious conflict. Puritanism, the newly found political fervor of Cromwellianism, and the remnants of the Roman Church rejected all non believers, each promoting their own cause. The conflicts between Church groups, the Crown and political groups all claimed their followers and their impositions, tithes, and demands on rich and poor alike broke the spirit of men and many turned away from religion. Many families were freely "encouraged" to migrate to Ireland, or to the "colonies". Some were rewarded with grants of lands, others were banished.

Some families were forced to migrate to Ireland where they became known as the adventurers for land in Ireland. Protestant settlers "undertook" to keep their faith, being granted lands previously owned by the Catholic Irish. They were known as the "Undertakers". There is no evidence that the family name migrated to Ireland, but this does not preclude the possibility of their scattered migration to that county.

The New World offered better opportunities and some migrated voluntarily, some were banished mostly for religious reasons. Some left Ireland disillusioned, but many left directly from England, their home territories. Some also moved to the European continent.

Members of the family name Dainty sailed about the huge armada of three masted sailing ships known as the "White Sails" which plied the stormy Atlantic. These overcrowded ships such as the Hector, the Dove and the Rambler, were pestilence ridden, sometimes 30-40% of the passenger list never reaching their destination, their numbers reduced by dysentery, cholera, small pox and typhoid.

In North America, included amongst the first migrants which could be considered a kinsman of the surname Dainty, or a variable spelling of that family name was William Daintry who settled in New England in 1695; Henry Dainty settled in the Barbados in 1640; Katherine Daintye settled in Maryland in 1685.

From the port of entry many settlers made their way west, joining the wagon trains to the prairies or to the west coast. During the War of Independence, many loyalists made their way north to Canada about 1790, and became known as the United Empire Loyalists.

Contemporary notables of this surname, Dainty, include many distinguished contributors; Lord Daventry.

During the course of our research we also determined the many Coat of Arms granted to different branches of the family name.

The most ancient grant of a Coat of Arms found was:
Black with an ermine Diagonal stripe with a border of two gold stripes.
The crest was

controller of the king's household, Catherine was twice widowed before marrying Henry in 1543. She acted as regent for him while he campaigned in France (1544) and was influential in restoring his daughters, the future queens Mary I and Elizabeth I, to his favor; she helped educate both of them. A Protestant sympathizer, Catherine protected from persecution those who dissented from Catholic doctrine. After Henry's death and the accession of Edward VI, she married the new king's uncle, Thomas Seymour, Baron Seymour of Sudeley.

Letter of Katharine Parr to her husband, King Henry VIII, July 1544

Katharine Parr wed King Henry VIII on 12 July 1543 at Hampton Court Palace. Henry was her third husband, and not her personal choice. She was in love with Thomas Seymour, the brother of Henry's third wife, Jane; he eventually became her fourth husband just a few months after Henry's death in 1547. Once the marriage to Henry was settled upon, Katharine worked to make it successful. She was, in all respects, admirably suited to the task. She had experience managing temperamental elderly men, and nursing their various ailments. She was very intelligent and committed to scholarship, but she also participated fully in the life of Henry's court. She grew as fond of finery as any of his wives, and dressed magnificently.

She and Henry grew close. He refused to allow anyone else to wrap his badly ulcered leg, and he made her Queen-Regent while he attended the siege of Boulogne in 1544. This letter was written during that six-week absence, and its tone is loving and respectful. In it, Katharine mentions the King of Scotland's widow, Marie de Guise, as well as Henry's three children. In addition to her success as a sixth wife, Katharine was an admirable stepmother who genuinely loved the Princesses Mary and Elizabeth and Prince Edward.

....Although the distance of time and account of days neither is long nor many of your majesty's absence, yet the want of your presence, so much desired and beloved by me, maketh me that I cannot quietly pleasure in anything until I hear from your majesty. The time, therefore, seemeth to me very long, with a great desire to know how your highness hath done since your departing hence, whose prosperity and health I prefer and desire more than mine own. And whereas I know your majesty's absence is never without great need, yet love and affection compel me to desire your presence.

Again, the same zeal and affection force me to be best content with that which is your will and pleasure. Thus love maketh me in all things to set apart mine own convenience and pleasure, and to embrace most joyfully his will and pleasure whom I love. God, the knower of secrets, can judge these words not to be written only with ink, but most truly impressed on the heart. Much more I omit, lest it be thought I go about to praise myself, or crave a thank; which thing to do I mind nothing less, but a plain, simple relation of the love and zeal I bear your majesty, proceeding from the abundance of the heart. Wherein I must confess I desire no commendation, having such just occasion to do the same.

I make like account with your majesty as I do with God for his benefits and gifts heaped upon me daily, acknowledging myself a great debtor to him, not being able to recompense the least of his benefits; in which state I am certain and sure to die, yet I hope in His gracious acceptance of my goodwill. Even such confidence have I in your majesty's gentleness, knowing myself never to have done my duty as were requisite and meet for such a noble prince, at whose hands I have found and received so much love and goodness, that with words I cannot express it. Lest I should be too tedious to your majesty, I finish this my scribbled letter, committing you to the governance of the Lord with long and prosperous life here, and after this life to enjoy the kingdom of his elect.

From Greenwich, by your majesty's humble and obedient servant,
Katharine the Queen.
